Globalization

Globalization has been possible for many reasons but the most important are the use of new technologies of communication and information (ICT) because they allow to extend all kind of relationship with people from different continents. Globalization has also been possible because there are more means of transport and they are cheaper compare to many years ago. One example of this is the flying “low cost” companies. However, living in a globalized world has increased some risks. Today everybody knows that the economic crisis is a world’s crisis, and when one big company has to reduce its production, the number of unemployed increases in rich countries but also in poor countries because the economies of every country are connected. Another risk of globalization is that nowadays we have more freedom to move and diseases are easily expanded. Finally, terrorism now is not a problem of isolated countries but is an international problem that asks for international solutions.

*Sharing of ideas, attitudes and values across national borders. This sharing generally leads to an interconnectedness and interaction between peoples of diverse cultures and ways of life. Mass media and communication technologies are the primary instruments for cultural globalization.
*Increase in information flows between geographically remote locations. (This can also be seen as a technological change related to the advent of fibre optic communications, satellites, and increased availability of telephone and Internet.)
*Creation of international organizations to regulate the relationships among governments and to guarantee the rights arising from social and economic globalization.
*Establishment of a global common market, based on the freedom of exchange of goods and capital.
*Development of worldwide financial markets and better access to external financing for borrowers.
*Development of worldwide production markets and broader access to a range of foreign products for consumers and companies involving particularly movement of material and goods between and within national boundaries.
